

Mobile Use Policy – National Galleries of Scotland

Visitors to the National Galleries of Scotland are welcome to take photographs or video for personal, non-commercial use. All other uses require prior permission from National Galleries of Scotland and in some cases photography and recording in gallery spaces is not permitted (see below).

Some special exhibitions allow photography for personal, non-commercial use, without the use of flash, tripods or monopods, unless otherwise stated. If permitted it must be for personal, non-commercial use only. It is the visitor's responsibility to ensure no copyright is infringed.

There may be instances where photography is not permitted in special exhibitions – this will be indicated by a 'No Photography' notice or similar signage provided on exhibition information.

Photography may also be restricted for loaned works of art, as indicated by a 'Please do not photograph' notice on wall labels of certain works.

The use of selfie sticks is permitted, provided that users respect fellow visitors and adhere to our mobile use policy.

Please note that many of the artworks in our galleries are still within copyright and using these images in any way will require prior agreement with copyright holders or other licensing agents.

National Galleries of Scotland's Protection of Children, Young People and Adults at Risk of Harm policy does not allow photography or filming of children, young people or adults at risk of harm by members of the public unless specific permission has been sought. If a member of staff is concerned about photographs or video that you are taking, you will be asked to stop and to delete the images. Please do not publish the images you have taken and please do not take any more.

We reserve the right, at our sole discretion, to withhold and/or withdraw permission to photograph on our premises or to reproduce photographs of objects in our collection.
